Rathmines (Rath Maonais in Irish) is a suburb on the southside of Dublin, about 3 kilometres south of the city centre. It effectively begins at the south side of the Grand Canal and stretches along the Rathmines Road as far as Rathgar to the south, Ranelagh to the east and Harold's Cross to the west. Curiously, according to O Maitiu's history, although the hall held many concerts and events over the years, it never quite became the centre of entertainment the Rathmines Township commissioners had hoped for, and it was regularly rented out. Rathmines Road, Rathmines, Dublin, Ireland These prints are faithful reproductions of original images taken of towns and villages around Ireland over a years ago. As such, they accurately preserve the aesthetic, technical and historical qualities of the original images and the camera equipment of that era.
